Subra is currently the Area Head of International Business and a Senior Lecturer in the School of Management, Curtin Business School. His teaching interests lie in the areas of international management and international human resource management and he has co-ordinated and lectured several undergraduate and post graduate units since 2007. His research interests primarily focus on Asian multinational firms in the areas of strategic management, managerial and organisational global mindset antecedents and outcomes; ethical business practices and international human resource development. He was awarded the Curtin Business School New Researcher of the Year Award in 2008 in joint capacity.

Specialty areas of teaching

Practice-oriented activities and student engagement and participation

Description of teaching to showcase to others

Practical topical issues facing global managers in managing global businesses and global human capital are considered extensively and students learn to analyse management problems and generate solutions to real-life issues and problems. The issues of adaptation needed in cross-cultural or cross-national managerial interfaces are an overarching theme across the two units. Subra provides an online e-lecture followed by an interactive face-to-face workshop conducted in a collaborative teaching space. Subra will showcase how students with diverse backgrounds experience practice-oriented, real life challenging scenarios through a range of activities maximising student engagement and participation.
