Brief Description:

As part of the Transforming Learning at Curtin strategic program, the DVC-Education sponsored a project in the School of Electrical Engineering and Computing during Semester 2, 2013. The project, led by Cesar Ortega and facilitated by Diana Taylor and Shyam Cholayil, was a professional development initiative aimed at supporting academics to transform one element of their unit using technology. A study was conducted to analyse participants’ perception before and after the transformation project. Based on the findings, a set of take home messages were developed that characterise various aspects of a professional development program that may support transformation projects. This presentation will illustrate the nature of the professional development program, present transformation case studies and promote the take home messages.

Benefits:

This presentation will be of benefit for everyone involved in professional development, both receiving and delivering it.
