Flotsam and Jetsam

Work in progress research exhibition by Fran Sullivan-Rhodes

Opening: Tuesday 27 October at 10:30am
Gallery 501, Curtin University, Building 501, level 3

Living at the water's edge, a frequent pleasure is found in observing the textures and tangles of those things that come to rest along the shoreline. There are bits of things that emerge from the sand, fragments that remain of something larger, something from some other place, redolent of wonder and story and intrigue. The autoethnographic framing of my research project, investigating the experience of creative academic mothers in the intersection of their roles, has parallels in these peregrinations along the strand, where dipping into memory sees fragments emerge that are turned over in word and image, reflected on and used to make sense of broader experience.

The fragments once assembled are starting to make a new whole, like lace, like memory. Perfectly incomplete and transitory.
